(President Xi Jinping)

Socialism with Chinese characteristics with the essence of modernization depicts a combination of triumph in the coming years. After the successful conduct of the 20th National Congress in China, it is significant to highlight the next five-year plans of the country for a profound understanding of the leadership’s future aspirations vis-à-vis global development.

The great changes and structural reforms in this new era will bring many socioeconomic transformations to work on new goals and build a modern socialist country. A comparative historical analysis shows that China has proved to be the only nation encapsulating resilient attributes and unity even in time of global chaos. In this aspect, great achievements had been secured in opening up, reform, and socialist modernization, with notable evidence being made in new projects of rejuvenation and cooperation. All these developments have created solid foundations, favorable conditions, and key underpinnings for China’s continued progress in all respects.

Moreover, proactive strategies have been adopted by President Xi Jinping. Due to these policies, he has become the most popular statesman in the world. As the core of CPC, His Excellency Xi has shown great concern towards national rejuvenation and achieving party goals in the next five-year, including economic growth, technological innovation, wider regional cooperation, modernized industrial and education system, R & Ds, and much more. In this regard, China has been using the powerful ideological tenants of “Marxism” as a light to seek the truth, understand the world and its laws, and transform it, rather than applying rigid dogma.

The communist and socialist ideals expounded in Marxism tally with Chinese cultural values such as a people-centered orientation, harmony, and unity in diversity. They are consistent with the dream pursued by noble and idealistic Chinese for generations, i.e., to build a strong and prosperous nation. And they accord with the aspiration of Chinese progressives, dating back to the Opium War, to rescue the nation from subjugation.

A key feature of Marxism is that it not only defines the ideals of communism, but also specifies the ways and means by which they can be achieved. When Marxism was introduced to China, the founders of the CPC first reflected on it and conducted careful analysis, then gained hands-on experience, and finally chose to embrace it wholeheartedly. Since China's Communists chose Marxism, they have remained firm in upholding and developing it. Never have they wavered in their commitment, deviated from its goals, or abandoned it in favor of other options.

CPC has championed the cause of socialism and communism, standing firm in its ideals and convictions, and it has led the people to press forward toward these goals. China has established, upheld and developed socialism, upheld the principles of socialism with Chinese characteristics, and demonstrated the vitality and bright prospects of socialism. The nation has also remained true to socialism, and socialism has proved its worth to China.

Currently, all-inclusive development is the top priority of the Chinese government in order to build a modern socialist country in all dimensions. A new progressive philosophy has been presented by President Xi in all fronts with relevance to accelerating efforts and fostering an advanced pattern of domestic and international economic flow. In addition to that, special focus has been given to rural areas of China to build a modern socialist society. Agriculture and rural development and new production factors will be integrated to achieve sustainable outcomes and prosperity. This can be seen as a milestone step toward whole national rejuvenation.

Now, the world has been witnessing a new round of scientific, technological, and industrial revolution. This has provided a new direction in pursuing sustainable development and building a community with shared future. Nevertheless, these very aspects have been associated with China's next five-year goals. However, development is an uphill journey, which requires persistence, prudence, efforts, and due diligence. Under these assertions, it can be easily forecasted that China is going to experience great victory under President Xi in this new year of 'Rabbit', which denotes hope, success, harmony and great rejuvenation for creating a just socialist society.
