For decades, China has been a major player on the global stage, and its governance system and development model have played a significant role in its rise. China's remarkable achievement in poverty reduction is a model that Pakistan should consider emulating. Through robust economic growth and policies that favored the poorest, China lifted a staggering 730 million people out of extreme poverty.

The Chinese governance system and development model offer valuable lessons for Pakistan. By taking a closer look at the key elements of this system, we can continue to make progress towards our goals.

Chinese companies are global leaders in the civilian drone sector, and China is the world's second-largest drone market behind the United States.

During the coronavirus, China was the first to rise. From building hospitals in a matter of days to employing strict surveillance and assistance through drones, the world's second-largest economy managed to significantly cushion the impact of the coronavirus.
