Khalid Taimur Akram: Pakistan's Strong Stand Against Indian Aggression Earns Global Attention

BU YAZI 13 MAYIS 2025 TARİHİNDE KAFKASSAM EDITÖR TARAFINDAN YAZILMIŞTIR.

Pakistan has once again proven that it is not just a nation with a powerful military but one with principles rooted in restraint, ethics, and diplomacy. From May 7 to May 10, during the intense four-day Indo-Pakistan conflict, India resorted to deliberate provocations and unprovoked aggression, hoping to push Pakistan into a trap of escalation. But what followed was not merely a retaliatory campaign; it was a masterclass in strategic restraint, ethical warfare, and unmatched military prowess. Pakistan responded not with panic or indiscriminate force, but with a precisely calibrated operation that reinforced its status as a responsible nuclear power and a cornerstone of regional stability.

India has been doing aggression for many years as part of a long, sustained campaign of hostility, misinformation, and hegemonic ambitions. India has continuously tried to label Pakistan as a "state sponsor of terrorism" in global forums and has weaponized institutions like the FATF and manipulated narratives at the United Nations to isolate Pakistan diplomatically. Western countries were favoring India and tried to isolate Pakistan through sanctions and arming India with mass weapons, helping India's hegemony in the Indian Ocean. This smear campaign ignored Pakistan's significant achievements in counterterrorism, its robust financial regulations, and genuine peace initiatives.

Uzbekistan and Pakistan: Accelerators of Interregional Dialogue

Published on 6 May 2025

In the contemporary world of international relations, the “region-to-region” cooperation format is gaining increasing popularity. Current challenges in the areas of security, sustainable economic development, and social stability require not only the active involvement of nation-states and individual regions but also the advancement of interregional cooperation. This format facilitates the edmergence of new trends in the international arena and contributes to the strengthening of multi-level partnerships. One of the most prominent examples of such cooperation is the dialogue between Central and South Asia, which is becoming a significant trend within the broader Eurasian context. The international conference “Central and South Asia: Regional Connectivity.

Challenges and Opportunities,” held in Tashkent in July 2021, served as a starting point, giving impetus to the development of interregional cooperation. The upcoming Termez Dialogue, scheduled for May of this year, promises to mark a new stage in this process. Within the framework of this dialogue, Uzbekistan and Pakistan are expected to play a pivotal role, being regarded as key actors capable of shaping the trajectory of further rapprochement and coordination between the two regions. The formation of institutional mechanisms, the enhancement of humanitarian ties, and the strengthening of educational cooperation are essential for transforming CentralSouth Asian engagement into a sustainable and replicable model of interregional partnership.

Central Asia's Climate Policy for a Resilient and Sustainable Future

Published on 29 May 2025

<https://prccsf.com/paper/pdf/Central-Asia-Climate-Policy.pdf>

As the global climate crisis persists, Central Asia is stepping into a new era of environmental responsibility and regional cooperation. The announcement of the Regional Climate Summit 2026 (RCS 2026) in Astana underscores the determination of Central Asian countries to forge a unified front against climate change. Unveiled by Kazakhstan President Kassym-Jomart Tokayev at the 2023 Astana International Forum, RCS 2026 represents not only a pivotal diplomatic effort but also a shared commitment to sustainable development across the Central Asia region. RCS 2026 will bring together leaders from Kazakhstan, Uzbekistan, Kyrgyzstan, Turkmenistan, and Tajikistan to collaborate on five critical themes, such as low-carbon transition, climate adaptation, food security, a just transition, and climate finance. Preparatory consultations are already underway, with Almaty and Samarkand hosting the first regional dialogues, and further engagements are expected at major global events, including COP30 in Brazil and the 80th UN General Assembly in New York.

These consultations are designed to foster joint decisions, facilitate a regional climate finance mechanism, and catalyze new cross-border projects, all coordinated by the Central Asian Climate Fund's Project Office, with a dedicated headquarters in Kazakhstan. Central Asia's climate policy is no longer confined to national action plans or isolated environmental programs, evolving into a comprehensive regional strategy, grounded in science, driven by necessity, and inspired by a shared vision of a climate resilient future. As climate threats intensify, the Central Asian response may well become a model for other vulnerable regions seeking to chart a sustainable path forward.

Trans-Regional Integration and Connectivity in Central Asia: Strategies of Russia, China and European Union

Published on 31 May 2025

This article articulates that trans-regional integration and connectivity have primarily been considered in the context of cross-border transport and logistics corridors for regional and inter-regional trade. In the wake of the breakup of the former Soviet Union, Central Asia has reemerged in the ebb and flow of international exchanges, with global and regional powers intensively engaged in developing regional and trans-regional transport corridors across the region.

Russia, China, and the European Union (EU) have developed and are operating their own plans for integration and connectivity. Russia's approach to trans-regional integration in Eurasia's heartland reflects characteristics of both 'open regionalism' under the Greater Eurasian Partnership and 'close regionalism' within the framework of the Eurasian Economic Union (EEU). China's plans for regional and trans-regional integration in Eurasia's heartland, articulated through the Belt and Road Initiative (BRI), are based on the concept of open regionalism, despite geographical contiguity. Similarly, the EU's approach to regional and trans-regional integration in Central Asia is also grounded in the principles of open regionalism, where the Middle Corridor has become a necessity.

From May 7 to May 10, 2025, Pakistan demonstrated not just military might, but unparalleled strategic restraint, ethical warfare, and diplomatic maturity in the face of India's unprovoked aggression. In a masterfully executed operation, Pakistan neutralized Indian provocations without escalating the conflict into a full-scale war.

A New Era in Expanded Strategic Partnership Between Uzbekistan and Hungary

Khald Taimur Akram May 28, 2025

In a landmark moment for Central Europe and Central Asia, Uzbekistan and Hungary have officially ushered in a new phase of bilateral relations through the establishment of an Expanded Strategic Partnership. This milestone was formalized during President Shavkat Mirziyoyev's official visit to Budapest from May 19 to 21, 2025, where he met with Hungarian Prime Minister Viktor Orbán for high-level talks that symbolized mutual ambition, shared vision, and multidimensional cooperation. At the Carmelite Palace, both leaders signed a Joint Declaration on the Establishment of an Enhanced Strategic Partnership, cementing their commitment to deepening political, economic, cultural, and technological ties. This declaration reflects the alignment of Uzbekistan's "New Uzbekistan" reform agenda and Hungary's "Eastern Opening" foreign policy.

Alongside this declaration, a range of significant intergovernmental agreements were signed, including treaties on extradition, climate change cooperation, peaceful nuclear energy, innovation, disaster management, and science and technology. This comprehensive framework sets the foundation for broad and sustainable collaboration.
